GLIMPSE OF MAASAI LIFE IN KENYA

One of my favorite days this month was spent with Rhonda Baxter and her visiting daughter Rachel Cornelius.

After seeing Rhonda's property south of Nairobi from which she ministers to the Maasai., our first stop was at the home of one of her workers, Jeremy.

While visiting in the home I learned alot about Maassai life. His mom, Maria, pictured above, was his father's first wife and certainly has the larger and nicer tin-built home. Maria had ten children of her own, but when the second wife died, she also took that wife's twelve children to raise as her own.

The patriarch, though elderly and on crutches, has now taken two more wives, girls barely out of their teens. The two small children in the picture above are two of the third and fourth wives' kids. Each of those wives have very small and low tin shacks for their homes in the compound. Jeremy, as an older son, has also built his own small structure on the property.

Polygamy is now against the law in Kenya, but is not a problem easily solved for those already married. What should a husband do with his extra wives? If he chooses just one wife to live with, is that fair to the other wives who also want to be with him? He must still financially support them and their children.
